An Adventure for the Princess

By MARION MCGUIRE

The dragon-who-breathed-fire was the last of Princess Henrietta's birthday gifts—and the strangest! But the magic carpet and the slave-of-a-lamp were strange, too. Altogether, they gave her a mighty exciting and amazing birthday

ONCE upon a time there was a Princess who lived in a castle with her father, the King, and her mother, the Queen. She had brown curly hair, and three freckles on her nose. Usually she was quite well-behaved. But on the day when the Princess Henrietta was ten, she had a terrible temper tantrum.

She sat on the floor in the throne room surrounded by presents from everyone in the kingdom. But she looked up at her father and mother and asked, "Is this all the birthday I'm going to get?"

"My dear," scolded the Queen, "what a way to talk!"

"Hurrumph," said the King.

"I don't want any of this stuff!"

"But what shall we give you for your birthday?" asked the Queen.

"I want an adventure," said Henrietta.

"How strange!" said the Queen. "I remember when I was ten, I too wanted an adventure. Every princess does." She turned to the King and whispered.

The King's eyebrows shot up to his hair and down again as he listened. Several times he said, "But" or "I don't see." Finally he turned to Henrietta, and said, "Your mother tells me it is necessary that you be granted three wishes."

"I wish for a magic carpet, a slave-of-a-lamp, and a fire-breathing dragon."

"Very well," said the Queen. She clapped her hands to summon three courtiers. To the first she said, "Please telephone the Magic Carpet Company in Bagdad. Ask them to ship one of their smaller carpets to Princess Henrietta immediately." The courtier bowed and went out.

To the second courtier the Queen said, "Please run up to the attic and look in my private closet. There you will find an old lamp. Bring it to me." The second courtier bowed and hurried upstairs.

To the third courtier the Queen said, "Please look up all the dragons in the telephone book. See which one the Princess may call on today."

The first courtier was soon back. "Your Majesty," he panted, "the magic carpet should be here any minute now." The words were hardly out of his mouth when a magic carpet floated in. It circled the room twice and then came to rest before the Princess. She climbed aboard.

"How do I start it?" she shouted.

"The directions have not yet arrived, Your Highness." The Princess twisted the fringe on the front edge of the carpet.

"Oh, my GOODNESS!" shrieked Henrietta, bumping about on the ceiling.

"Get her down," demanded the Queen. The second courtier was so surprised to see Henrietta in the air that he dropped the lamp which he was bringing from the attic to the Queen. It smashed to the floor with a loud crash. Smoke and fire filled the room, and when it cleared away, nothing was left of the lamp. Where it had been stood a tall stranger,

When the smoke cleared, there stood a tall stranger. "Get the Princess off the ceiling," begged the Queen.

seven feet high. He was dressed in a robe and turban.

"Who are you?" asked the King.

"I am Abdul, slave-of-the-lamp."

The Queen begged, "Please get my daughter down from the ceiling." But when she looked up again, there was no sign of the Princess or the magic carpet.

"Do something!" gasped the Queen.

Abdul pointed himself in the direction of the open window and floated out. He discovered the Princess riding over the castle.

"Hello," said Henrietta. "Did you come with the carpet?"

"No," replied Abdul. "I am the slave of the lamp."

"Fine," said Henrietta. "Please help me drive this carpet. Wait! Someone on the palace roof is trying to signal us."

"Let's go down," Abdul suggested. He twisted the fringe on the back of the carpet and they went down to the roof. The third courtier was waving a white flag. As soon as they could hear, he shouted, "Princess, you have an appointment at the Cave of the Dragons in half an hour. If you hurry, you can be back home in time for tea. Happy adventure!"

"Thank you," called Henrietta. "Let's go!" The carpet turned towards the Cave of the Dragons.

The Cave of the Dragons was in a gloomy part of the kingdom. As Henrietta and Abdul flew near the Cave, the air was filled with smoke and it grew hot. The carpet bumped madly.

"We'll have to bail out," Abdul decided. He brought out an umbrella from a secret pocket. He and Henrietta clung to the handle and jumped off the carpet. They landed in the middle of the forest which surrounded the Cave. Henrietta helped Abdul to his feet and dusted him off. Suddenly his face looked queer.

"What's the matter?" she asked.

"Nothing," said Abdul but he looked even queerer. Then they heard a low grumble. Henrietta looked up into the burned trees. At first she could see only a large pair of eyes and a puff of smoke. Then she found a mouth, smiling and breathing smoke. Finally she saw the rest of the dragon, curled around seven trees.

"Do I frighten you, Princess?" asked the dragon, waving his tail.

"No, not at all," answered Henrietta.

"Your friend seems a little alarmed," continued the dragon. Henrietta looked at Abdul. He was growing smaller. His dark face was growing paler and paler.

"What's the matter, Abdul? Are you tired or ill?"

"No, Your Highness. It's just that I — can't — stand — the — smell of smoke." Suddenly Abdul vanished.

"Poor fellow," said the dragon. "Well, come along."

"Come along where?" asked Henrietta. "I haven't too much time. It's my birthday, and I'm supposed to be back at the palace in time for tea."

"Of course, Your Highness." Henrietta thought that the dragon's little eyes glittered wickedly. His tail crashed through the trees as they walked towards the Cave. Suddenly the dragon clutched his throat. His fiery breath stopped. "Help," he whispered. "The fire's going out. I can't breathe. Help!"

The dragon was gasping for smoke to breathe. Quickly Henrietta unfurled the umbrella and fanned the dragon's head. Soon he could breathe again.

"Thank you," he wheezed. "You saved my life. Now I shall save yours."

"Save mine? How?"

"I was supposed to hold you prisoner in the Cave of the Dragons until the King paid a large ransom for your return. But since you have been kind to me, I'll see that you are back in the palace in time for tea. Hop aboard!"

Henrietta climbed on the dragon's back, holding on to his ears with both hands. Back they zoomed to the palace.

The King, the Queen, and the courtiers were out on the roof looking through the royal telescope. The dragon carefully circled the palace, and then dropped down for a landing.

"Hello, everybody," called Henrietta. "Don't be afraid. He saved my life. Do you think he might stay for tea?"

"Of course," said the Queen nervously. But the dragon blushed and said he thought he'd better be going back. No amount of coaxing could make him stay, and the last they saw of him was a puff of smoke as he flew out of sight.

Henrietta walked down from the palace roof with her parents. In the throne room a huge birthday cake was waiting for her. She hugged the King and the Queen, and kissed them both. "Thank you for my wonderful birthday adventure," said Henrietta, and she blew out the candles on her cake.

The dragon was gasping for smoke. Henrietta unfurled the umbrella and fanned him.

YOU CAN DO IT! You can be carried away through strange lands you never dreamed of . . . you can be thrilled and delighted as never before. You can experience all the wonders of an amazing excursion when you read the greatest stories of all time, written by the world's most gifted authors, and brought together for you in

SIX BIG VOLUMES of The WHAT-EVERY-CHILD-SHOULD-KNOW Library

CHAMPIONS OF FREEDOM

Sixty-seven immortal stories of great men and women who changed the thinking, living and pursuit of happiness for all mankind from Moses and Socrates to Isaac Newton, William Penn, Helen Keller, Abraham Lincoln. Men of action of every nation appear in this procession of Champions of Freedom.

DOG STORIES

In this book, Albert Payson Terhune, the foremost writer of dog stories in the world tells eighty-five heart-warming stories. Here are the dogs of kings and beggars, dogs who were actors and dogs who were heroes, dogs who saved lives and dogs who died in devotion to their masters or their duty.

NATURAL WONDERS

This wonderful book will tell you about the beginning of life, how we grow and about the many other remarkable phenomena of science and nature. On subjects ranging from ants to elephants, the author Edwin Tenney Brewster, will bring you a wealth of useful, interesting information.

FAMOUS STORIES

In this volume there have been collected the most enchanting of those familiar much-loved stories — not fairy stories nor quite true ones, but they could have happened! They are stories free and joyful, written by such well-known authors as Charles Dickens, John Ruskin and William Austin.

BIBLE STORIES

You will treasure this wonderful book as long as you live. No one needs to tell you of the beauty of the Scriptures, how simply its enchanting stories are told. You will be so much wiser and gain a greater understanding of the world and the people around you for having read them.

FOLK TALES

Long ago before there were any books to read, gifted story-tellers would go from house to house and recite their heart-warming tales. These same stories, passed along from generation to generation, are collected for you in this book. They are folk tales and legends of many lands.
